DISCUSSION

The purpose of this service newsletter is to notify operators that Cessna is standardizing the service document formats between our propeller and jet models. Some changes that you will notice immediately are the number of document types, changes in document layout, and changes in the numbering format. Cessna will not publish new service newsletters (SNL), service kits (SK), modification kits (MK), and special service projects (SSP). Cessna will now use only service bulletins (SB) and service letters (SL) to transmit information to the owners and service providers.

After January 1, 2012, service bulletins will change the design of the airplane (affect Type Design). For example, service bulletins will remove a rivet and replace it with a Hi-Lok. Service letters will not change the design of the airplane (do not affect Type Design). For example, service letters will be issued to check and adjust a system or remove and replace a part with the same part number.

Operators must take note that service letters may now be issued with mandatory or recommended compliance levels and may contain safety of flight information.

The table that follows shows the new service document types:
